PREFACE

In the process of learning a language, whether it is the mother-tongue or a second language, listening to and speaking the language comes first, writing the language comes after. All work-books, therefore, if they must be of any help to the students, must pre-suppose plenty of aural and oral practice for which a teacher is indispensable.

Writing English, though last in the learning process, is by no means the least important of the steps in learning English. It is an acknowledged fact of the learning process that writing helps to fix in the mind what has been learnt by listening and speaking. In learning a language correctly, pupils must be made to repeat, in complete sentence form, the many and varied patterns that constitute the correct usage of the language in as many situations as possible.

The present series 'Let's Write English', is meant to fulfill this need of practising in writing what the pupils have already heard and practised orally. The exercises in this book correspond to the units and lessons of the series 'LET'S READ ENGLISH' by the same authors. The method followed in this series of seven work-books is that called the 'structural method' which has been universally acclaimed as the most natural of the systems in learning a language. Patterns of English language have been graded carefully, so that beginning with the easier and most common ones, the pupils are gradually introduced to the more advanced patterns of speech and writing. The same patterns are repeated in a variety of situations. This is the only way to help pupils in forming the all-important habit of thinking, speaking and writing in complete sentences and in accordance with the correct usage of the language.

With this aim in view, the emphasis in this series has not been placed on enlarging the vocabulary of the students ; nor has it been placed on the gradual development of grammatical classification of words and phrases. The emphasis has been placed on the ordering of the various patterns that go to constitute the English language so as to make the progress of the students in learning the language both easier and faster. The writing work in this book corresponds to Book III of the series Let's Read English by the same authors.

In the preparation of this series, note has also been taken of the Syllabus for English Readers prepared by the National Council of Educational Research and Training, New Delhi. The work-books have been amply illustrated to help beginners in their work. It is hoped that this series will be of great help to students of various classes in learning correctly the use of the more important structures of the English Language.
